

he is not going to lose his job. How are we going to control the permits? How are we going to control it? He is going to drive to work. He isn't going to lose his job. So he is going to be driving the highways and the streets because we can't control it. That's right, exactly what is going to happen.

SENATOR MARSH: Time is up.

SENATOR HABERMAN: Thank you, Madam President.

SENATOR MARSH: Senator Chambers, I recognize you for closing.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Thank you, Madam President. Members of the Legislature, everything we do should be converted into a learning process. Our job as legislators is not merely to attempt to enact wise and just laws but to instruct by our example. Apparently a majority of the Legislature still feels that it is all right to put into legislation an injustice, but they are irritated because a few minutes are being taken to try to plead for justice for those families who are to be harmed by this injustice. That is not reasonable in a supposedly civilized legislative assembly. All that we can deal with here are words. Sometimes we are persuasive, sometimes we are not. But as the sower who goes out and sows seed, how do we know whether the ground is fertile, thorny or rocky? We can only do what is within our power to do and hope for the best results and I am hoping for a result now which will be in the best interest of the people and the legislative process. A bill such as the one before us now ought not be enacted by this Legislature and I am going to do everything within my power and the rules to prevent that from happening. Those who were in favor of LR 16 had the bankers and the financial community to do a lot of work, jerk chains, pull strings, make threats, cajole, promise and whatnot to get their way. And we spent all of the morning and maybe part of the afternoon on LR 16. Some people thought the farm economy was important. Others thought the interest of bankers was important. And I feel that the interests of certain people's families is important. I am not like the hypocritical Reagan who says, work for the family then cut those programs that would keep the family together as a cohesive unit. I am not like those who do all of the yammering and yapping about justice when maybe the trial attorneys want it yammered and yapped about.
